

Everyone here wants to look busy.

Look busy working on a thesis

Look busy passing an exam

Look busy looking lovable

Look busy directing wars

Look busy making money

but most importantly,

Look busy having fun

They all have their plans in their heads.

They all want their share of this world.

They all know their plans
could fail.

They all feel that their share might slip their hands.

What would others think of one who has no share in this world?

Out of boredom, one decides to lift his head from his task. He sees new things, unplanned things and things which he did not know of before.

The man's curiosity attracts him to something. It is small.

In the present, everything is a small piece. Its existence is fleeting. In that short moment, he now gets busy.

After he is done, he gets busy resting.

He gets up, meets the present and looks for his share of the world piece by piece.
