Some Philosophy

Popular thought is the Macrocosm is the Microcosm.

Of course, it seems silly, a sea is wet, thoughts are not, and a human is not as big as a planet.

I believe the similarity is true, but more subtle.

We could suppose that the material (physics) is kind of isomorphic to the processes going on in our mind (psyche), and that holds even if matter and mind elements belong to different domains. The ancient Greeks probably thought the same.

So we can see that there is no true progression or growth from Mars to Neptune needed to quantify our growth and spiritual status.

Just that like the planets orbiting in harmony, letting all our faculties be what they are, aligns us with the music of the spheres.
